

2024 Survey of Londoners

December 2024

Background and methodology

- London Councils commissioned independent research company, Ipsos, to conduct a poll of Londoners, exploring perceptions of the most important issues facing the capital, views of the local area, devolution, housing, transport, employment and crime. In 2024, new questions were added in the housing, devolution and employment sections. The equality section which in the 2022 survey and removed in 2023, was reinstated for this year's survey.
- Ipsos conducted an online survey of ~1,000 adults aged 18+ living in London using Ipsos's Online Access Panel, a panel of pre-recruited individuals who have agreed to take part in research.
- Fieldwork took place between 1 – 17 October 2024 inclusive.
- Quotas were set by age, gender, work status and inner/outer London, with final data also weighted to these profiles along with housing tenure and ethnicity to match the profile of the wider London population.
- Further technical information about statistical reliability can be found in the Appendices.
- An asterisk (*) represents a value of less than one per cent, but not zero.
- N/C = no change in the trend data from previous wave; N/A = not applicable.
- Results are based on all participants unless otherwise stated.
- Trend data from previous online surveys conducted in 2018, 2019, 2021, 2022 and 2023 have been shown where this is available and comparable, with fieldwork dates as follows:
  - 2018: 26 October – 5 November 2018
  - 2019: 29 November – 4 December 2019
  - 2021: 27 October – 15 November 2021
  - 2022: 27 October – 9 November 2022
  - 2023: 18 September – 9 October 2023

Key findings (1)

The cost of living continues to be the most important issue facing Londoners in 2024, followed by housing affordability, and crime and policing.

Four in five say there are not enough affordable homes in London. Londoners continue to see their housing costs increase and most have had to take action as a result.

Still, fewer Londoners say they are likely to move out of the capital, as some attitudes around the quality of homes are improving.

A majority support new homes being built, especially if they are affordable and available to buy (not rent).

Londoners trust their local communities and local councils to make development decisions.

There is openness to taking action to making homes more energy efficient, especially switching to renewable tariffs and insulating homes.

Londoners are increasingly satisfied with their local area and most feel a sense of belonging.

Half are satisfied with their local council. There is growing optimism that public services will improve, and more economic optimism.

Most support a road tax and funding for more pavement and pedestrian areas.

Nearly half support more devolution, but majorities support more devolution of housing and transport.

Support for increased taxation and spending powers is contingent on local communities having more of a say on how revenues are spent and revenues being directed to services in London.

Key findings (2)

Londoners are generally satisfied with their jobs, but satisfaction is lower among those dissatisfied with their health.

The main barriers to employment are low pay, job flexibility and travel costs.

Londoners would find access to digital technology and support with the job search useful.

Most are satisfied with their physical and mental health.

Satisfaction with most health services is growing. And while on a positive trajectory, satisfaction with GPs is still lower than with other services.

Waiting times continue to be the biggest problem facing London's healthcare system.

Most Londoners continue to feel safe in their local areas, but women are much less likely to feel safe after dark.

Londoners are most worried about fraud, robbery and knife crime, and would like the police to prioritise knife crime.

One in three have been impacted by domestic violence, up from a quarter in 2022.

A growing number of Londoners say everyone living in London has equal access to the same opportunities, but people continue to be split on whether this applies regardless of disability or social class.

Half think more needs to be done to tackle racism.

Key issues facing London

In line with last year's findings, three quarters of Londoners think the cost of living is the most important issue facing London. Housing affordability and crime and policing also register highly as key issues facing London today.

- The cost of living is particularly important for private renters (83%) and people from a minority ethnic background (81%).
- Alongside the cost of living, housing affordability (59%) and crime and policing (55%), make up the top three issues facing London. Housing affordability, and crime and policing, have increased by 5 and 8 percentage points respectively since 2023.
- NHS/GP services (48%) and homelessness and rough sleeping (46%) round out the top five issues that Londoners think London is facing. Notably, homelessness and rough sleeping has increased by 8ppts.
- Other notable changes are an increase in concern about roads and traffic (up 6ppts to 29%), terrorism (up 8ppts to 19%) and civil unrest (up 7ppts to 15%).
- Women's safety was a new code introduced in 2024, and around three in ten think this is a key issue facing London (29%); 39% of women see women's safety as key issue facing London.

Housing affordability

With a majority of Londoners continuing to face rising rent or mortgage payments, the 2024 survey highlights that affordability remains a key factor in determining Londoners' attitudes towards housing.

- On average Londoners spend 42% of their personal monthly income on their rent/mortgage. Once this is paid, a majority prioritise spending their remaining money on utility bills or food shopping.
- Most Londoners continue to say they are facing rising housing costs (72%). Over half of Londoners who rent are concerned their landlord will increase their rent (56%) – and almost half (48%) think they might have to move if their rent is increased further.
- As a result, many Londoners have reduced their spending to afford their living costs (40%) or dipped into their savings (24%) to cover the costs.
- 80% of Londoners who rent think there are not enough affordable homes in London. Just 24% of Londoners who rent think there are enough suitable properties available for them to rent in London.
- There has been a softening of some attitudes around the quality of homes, with renters less likely than in 2023, to say their home is too small indoors or too small for the number of people living in it.
- Londoners do not see housing affordability going away as an issue, with almost half (48%) thinking house prices will not fall in the next two years (+11ppts from 2023).
- However, 42% think they are likely to own their own home when they next move. Affording a deposit and mortgage continue to be the main barrier to buying.
- Despite concerns over costs of living in London, enthusiasm for London remains, with over half (54%) saying it is unlikely they will leave London in the next five years (+11 percentage points since 2023).
- Amidst rising concern about homelessness as a key issue facing London, 83% think rough sleeping is a serious problem for London, up slightly (+4) from 2023.

Over a third of renters and mortgage owners report spending at least 40% of their personal monthly income on housing costs.

Building and retrofitting homes

A majority of Londoners support new homes being built. But opinions are divided on who they trust most to make decisions on new housing developments

- Three in five Londoners (60%) support more homes being built in their local area. Fewer than one in five (18%) oppose more homes being built.
- Private renters, those in inner London, and men are among those most supportive of new homes being built.
- Londoners are most supportive of new homes being built if they are affordable (74% support). Three in five support new homes being built if they were available to buy, were council housing or were housing association housing (each 60%).
- Over half (56%) of Londoners support new homes being built if they are built on green belt land which has previously been built on (sometimes described as grey belt land).
- However, Londoners are less supportive of new homes being built if they were high rise flats (34% support, 40% oppose) or for private renting (36% support, 33% oppose).
- Londoners are most likely to trust their local community (63%) to make decisions on new housing developments – but support is also high for their local council (57%) and the Mayor of London (50%).
- Many Londoners have already taken action to make their home more energy efficient. 43% have reduced their electricity use at home and 35% have lowered the temperature at home by two degrees. A quarter (25%) have insulated their home, and a fifth (19%) have switched to a renewable energy tariff.
- 61% of Londoners say they would consider switching to a renewable energy tariff and 56% would consider insulating their home

Three in five Londoners continue to support more homes being built in their local area.

Attitudes to councils and the local area

Satisfaction with the local area and local councils have held up in 2023, and most people feel a sense of belonging.

- There has been a slight uptick in how satisfied Londoners are with their local area as a place to live (65%, +3 percentage points). Likewise, nearly 7 in 10 Londoners continue to say they have a sense of belonging to their local area. Those who are satisfied with their council, local area, homeowners, and those with children are most likely to feel this sense of belonging.
- Most Londoners (74%) are satisfied with their home, up slightly from 2023 (+3). There has been a slight decline in how satisfied Londoners are with their local high street/town centre – yet 57% remain satisfied. But Londoners are divided about whether their local area and their high street/ town centre has got better, worse, or stayed the same.
- Half of Londoners are satisfied with how their local council runs things, in line with previous years.
- Londoners are increasingly optimistic about public services in London, with 40% (+4) saying they think they will improve over the next five years, though 31% disagree. Men, Londoners under 34s, and those with children in the household are particularly optimistic.
- When considering new policies that could be introduced in London, Londoners remain very supportive of policies that would support London’s infrastructure, like introducing a road tax (67%) and funding more pavements, footpaths and pedestrian areas (64%).

Two thirds of Londoners say they are satisfied with their local area as a place to live, with a majority of Londoners saying they feel a strong sense of belonging to their local area.

London's institutions and devolution

Londoners continue to support more powers being transferred to London, especially around housing and transport.

- Londoners are now slightly more likely to say that they do not trust any of the key institutions to make decisions on how services are provided in their local areas. Amongst the institutions, local councils continue to be most trusted. The upward trend in trust in the GLA/ Mayor of London has continued.
- Almost half (46%) of Londoners continue to support transferring more powers to councils.
- Support for transferring powers to London's regional and local government continues to be stronger when Londoners are faced with specific policy areas like housing (61%) and public transport (61%).
- Half (49%) of Londoners agree that the Mayor of London and London boroughs currently have enough powers to develop solutions that work for local communities. This continues an upward trend from 2022 (42%) and 2023 (45%).
- 44% of Londoners want to see local councils have more powers over tax and spending, in line with 2023. Support for local councils having more powers rises if it means local communities have more say over how revenues are spent locally (70%), or if the spending remains in London (64%). But support continues to be weaker if it means that London and other parts of the UK pay different rates of taxation (40%).

Local government continues to be more trusted than central government to make decisions on how services are provided locally. Though more Londoners now do not trust any governmental institution.

Q14. Which of these, if any, do you trust most to make decisions about how services are provided in your local area?

Base: All adults aged 18+ in Inner/Outer London (2024:1000; 2023: 1000; 2022 : 1021) : Fieldwork dates 1-17 October 2024; Source: Ipsos UK

Support for granting more powers to London remains in line with 2023.

INTRO. A growing number of cities across England are agreeing devolution deals with central government. Devolution means transferring powers over budgets and services from central government to local government.

In London, devolution means transferring more powers to London local and regional government – that is the London Mayor and the London Boroughs.

Q15. To what extent, if at all, do you support or oppose transferring more powers to London?

Londoners were asked for views about giving local councils more fiscal power...

INTRO. Currently, most taxes in the UK are controlled by the UK government, with tax rates set by the Government and the Treasury determining how money should be distributed across government.

In England, local authorities set council tax rates up to a limit set by the government and collect and keep the revenue.

Some argue that local councils should have increased powers to set levels of tax and decide how it is spent, even if it means levels of tax differ between London and other parts of the country.

Q23_08. To what extent do you support or oppose local councils having more powers over tax setting and spending locally?

Employment

A new series of questions were asked in 2024 exploring attitudes towards employment among Londoners. The findings identify high levels of satisfaction among those in work for the flexibility, work-life balance, and their job overall.

- Around 7 in 10 of those in work say they are satisfied with the flexibility of their work (72%), their work-life balance and their job overall (both 68%). Likewise, over half of those in work are satisfied with their pay (57%) and opportunities for progress (52%).
- Job satisfaction is lower among those dissatisfied with their physical or mental health.
- The main barriers to employment are pay (17%), job flexibility and travel costs (both 15%).
- Half (53%) of Londoners would use a job website to access information about employment opportunities. This is followed by recruitment agencies (35%) and friend or family member (27%). Around 1 in 5 would go to their local council (20%) or the GLA (17%).
- Digital technology and the internet plays a key role in helping Londoners find paid work. 30% say that access to digital technology/the internet has / would help them find paid work. Likewise, 22% say support with using technology has / would help them find paid work. Support and training is also important, with 23% referencing support and training around finding a new job (e.g. interview skills, CV skills) and 21% referencing work-related skills training (e.g. for spoken/ written English, IT, job-specific skills).

Health services

Long waiting times are the biggest perceived issue facing London's health system.

- Most Londoners continue to be satisfied with their physical health (63%) and mental health (68%). Londoners are also more likely to think that their physical and mental health has got better, rather than worse in the last year.
- Half of Londoners (49%) have accessed a GP in the last 12 months, and a third (32%) an NHS hospital. There has been a slight increase in the proportion of Londoners who have used private healthcare (18%, +5ppts). 11% have used NHS funded mental health services.
- Satisfaction with the services provided by an NHS GP has risen 8 ppts, returning to a similar level seen in 2022. Londoners who have used vaccination services are most satisfied by the service they received (95%).
- A majority of Londoners (79%) accessed an NHS GP service within a month (+3), and around half (46%) were seen within a week. But Londoners continue to have greater difficulties being seen by an NHS hospital (46%) or NHS clinic (51%) within a month.
- Within this context, two thirds of Londoners (65%) continue to see long waiting times as the biggest problem facing the healthcare system in London (-2 compared with 2023). This is followed by slow referrals between services (43%) and access to treatment (42%). A smaller number of Londoners (23%) see poor treatment as the biggest problem facing the healthcare system in London (-3 compared with 2023).

Crime and feelings of safety

Londoners' opinions on crime are mostly consistent with 2023. Londoners are most likely to say that out of different types of crimes, they would like the police to prioritise knife crime

- Londoners' perceptions of levels of safety remain consistent with 2023, with Londoners more likely to feel safe in their local area during the day (76%, -2ppts) than after dark (48%, +1ppt). Women (35%) continue to feel considerably less safe after dark than men (60%).
  - Londoners are most worried about being a victim of fraud/scams (68%). There has been an increase in concern about being a victim of violence (+5), a hate crime (+5), and terrorism/extremism (+6). Three new codes were added to this year's survey: being a victim of harassment (51%), indecent exposure (42%) and stalking (41%).
  - Londoners are most likely to think that the type of crime the police should give highest priority to is knife crime (44%).
- This has a sizeable lead over robberies, violence (both 25%), and burglary (24%). But Londoners are split on whether they have the opportunity share their views with the police on what the police should prioritise.
- A third of Londoners say they know someone who has been affected by domestic abuse, which is an increase on 2023 (+4), including 12% being a victim themselves. Two thirds of Londoners continue to say that they would report domestic abuse to the police (65%), followed by around half who would report it to a helpline (53%) or domestic abuse specialist (49%). 27% are not confident that someone experiencing domestic abuse would be able to access support if they reported it, which whilst down on 2023 (-2%), remains a sizeable minority.

Equality

Attitudes towards equality are slightly improved on 2022, when these questions were last asked. However, whilst Londoners are more likely than not to think that everyone has equal access to the same opportunities regardless of different identities, over half continue to think more needs to be done to tackle racism facing ethnic minorities in London.

- Around half of Londoners think that everyone living in London has equal access to the same opportunities regardless of their gender (53%), sexual orientation (52%) and religion (49%). These are all up compared to when the question was last asked in 2022.
- 46% think everyone has access to the same opportunities regardless of their nationality (27% agree), and 45% in terms of their race (30% disagree). Both forms of identity have seen a move towards the public agreeing with this statement. In 2022, the public were split in terms of whether they agreed or disagreed that everyone had the same opportunities regardless of their race.
- A smaller percentage agree that everyone living in London has access to equal opportunity regardless of their social class (41%) or disability (38%). However, in 2022, Londoners were more likely to disagree, than agree, with the statement for these groups.
- Over half (54%) of Londoners think more needs to be done to tackle racism in London (+3 pts from 2022), rising to 65% among those from minority ethnic backgrounds (+4 from 2022). One in five (20%) think enough is already being done to tackle racism in London. A smaller minority think that either more than enough is being done to tackle racism in London (12%) or that no racism is faced by ethnic minorities in London (4%).

Half of Londoners think that everyone has equal access to the same opportunities regardless of their gender and sexual orientation, but views are more split on disability and social class.
